Dolbey Launches Fusion Voice Version 8.0 Software

Concord, Ohio, October 10, 2004 – Dolbey, a developer and provider of voice and text solutions for over 80 years, launches the newest Fusion Voice software release; Version 8.0 Fusion Voice Server. This new, scalable digital dictation platform incorporates new technologies including Microsoft Corporation's .Net structures and Intel's Dialogic Telephony platforms to provide the most powerful and flexible offering for healthcare, legal and business dictation applications.

New components of the Fusion Voice Server include HIPAA features for healthcare customers such as extensive user and activity audit trails, an integrated data encryption, and enhanced application security. Also premiering with the Fusion Voice introduction is the option for an embedded speech recognition platform for back-end speech recognition. Back-end speech recognition processes dictation recordings through medical or legal speech recognition software to produce a pre-transcribed document for editing to save time and money. This exclusive process, independent of a user's document management system, can provide significant productivity gains for transcriptionists and secretaries.

Fusion Voice is available as a stand-alone digital voice dictation solution as well as an integrated component of Dolbey's successful Fusion Voice, Text and Speech platform for healthcare organizations which provides dictation workflow, document management and advanced speech recognition.

Dolbey's direct and indirect sales channel have a market share including several thousand healthcare and healthcare related customers of a legacy digital dictation platforms who will be introduced to the new Version 8.0 Fusion Voice Server at the Association for Health Information Management Association (AHIMA) conference in Washington D.C.
